The Challenge: If you finish reading through the whole Bible (the New Testament for kids under 15) during the year – regardless of when you began – you are invited to a dinner the following January for all those who have completed the task.

The Motivation: To become more familiar with God’s word and thus to know Him better and to be better equipped to serve Him.

How to Do It: There are just under 1200 chapters in the Bible. To read through the Bible in a year, you’ll need to cover around 24 chapters a week — that’s something like 4 chapters a day, 6 days a week, or 5 chapters a day, 5 days a week. If you stretch the process over 14 months, it’s about 20 chapters a week; 16 months means 17 chapters a week. I would suggest that you read 3 or 4 chapters at a time from whichever book you’re working on, and mix in a Psalm or a Proverb with it. Keep track of what you’ve read on the chart. Mix it up — don’t read straight from Genesis to Revelation. Jump from Old Testament to New, from history to prophets to Paul’s letters, etc. Don’t let this become legalistic. Enjoy God’s word!
